ALPACA FACTS

Alpacas are part of the Camelid family, i.e. Camels, Llamas (believed to have bred from Guanacos), Guanacos, Alpacas (descended from Vicuna) and Vicunas (only seen in the wild, mostly in Peru). Alpacas are usually bred for their fleece (producing approx. 3kg each)

- There are two breeds of Alpaca, the Huacaya and the Suri. The Huacaya has a dense, fluffy, woolly fleece whilst the Suri has long flowing silky ringlets.
- Alpacas can be kept at a rate of 5-6 per acre of good grass.
- Alpacas are very hardy and do not require expensive housing. A three-sided shelter from the worst of the rain, snow or sun is all that is required. They usually prefer to be outside otherwise.
- Alpacas feed on grass, hay/haylage and some alpaca concentrates in winter. They must, of course, have clean water at all times.
- Usual husbandry care includes trimming toenails 3 times per year as necessary; vaccinating against clostridia diseases and worming 6-monthly; shearing annually and it is wise to inject weak crias or crias born late in the year with Vitamins A, D, & E.
- One cria per year is usual (i.e. gestation 11.5 months). Crias are usually weaned at about 6 months.
- Alpacas usually give birth in the daylight hours as in their country of origin the nights are freezing cold and baby alpacas (crias) need to be dried off before nightfall.

- The mothers don't lick the young as cattle and sheep do, the cria rolls in the grass to remove the birth sack and then sleeps in the sun to dry off naturally.
- Twins have been known but are very rare and usually one or both fail to survive.
- Females mature at 12 months, males at 15 months onwards although it is usually two and a half to three years before a male is mature enough to become a full working stud.
- The lifespan of an alpaca is 15-20 years.
- Alpacas are intelligent animals and can easily be halter-trained for show purposes etc.
- Alpacas can be transported easily and usually sit down for the whole journey.

Some common terms

Cria: The term for a young alpaca from birth until he/she is weaned;

Dam: The female parent of an alpaca;

Sire: The male parent of an alpaca;

Herd sire/Stud/Macho: A male who is used to breed female on an alpaca farm.

Dare 2 Dream

Ray and Lina have "dared" to dream of owning a farm for many years..... and now it is a reality that is being shared with their children!

WHY ALPACAS

- Alpacas are an environmentally friendly livestock.
- Alpacas are such enchanting animals.
- Alpacas can be halter trained and even kept as pets.
- Garments crafted from the silky fibre of Alpacas have the look and feel of cashmere.

Come see the magical aura these wonderful animals portray!

It's a dream until you write it down, and then it's a goal. - Anonymous
